SEMESTER IV

Compulsory Course:

HIS 401: Conventional and Non-Conventional Tools of History: Archives, Field Study, and Dissertation

Marks Division: Unit I, II and III: 20 Marks; Field Study 20 [20+ 20 = 40]

Viva-Voce 10= 50

Conventional and Non-Conventional Tools of History: Archives, Field Study, and Dissertation

When integrated into the history curriculum, field studies serve as a powerful tool to enhance academic learning and students' connection to the past. The interdisciplinary nature of field studies, which incorporates geography, archaeology, and anthropology, significantly enriches the understanding and appreciation of history. These studies promote contextual understanding, critical thinking, and cultural awareness. By merging oral history with field studies, we gain a deeper understanding of the past, capturing first-hand accounts of historical events and personal perspectives. This approach complements traditional historical methods and contributes to a more nuanced and inclusive historical record. The focus on experiential learning through field studies allows students to directly engage with historical sites, artifacts, and landscapes, thereby increasing student engagement and motivation beyond the confines of the traditional classroom.

Conventional tools of history refer to the methods and resources historians use to study and interpret the past. These tools include:

Primary Sources, the cornerstone of history research, are original documents or physical objects created at the time under study. These include letters, diaries, photographs, official records, and artifacts. They provide a direct link to the past, enhancing the authenticity of historical narratives.

Secondary Sources: Works that interpret or analyze primary sources. These include books, articles, and documentaries created by historians and scholars.

The study of how history has been written and the various interpretations offered over time are crucial tools.

Oral History is collecting and studying historical information using interviews with people who have personal knowledge of past events.

Archaeology studies human history by excavating sites and analyzing artifacts and other physical remains.

Chronology: The arrangement of events in their order of occurrence helps us understand the sequence and context of historical events.

Paleography: The study of ancient writing systems and the deciphering and dating historical manuscripts.

These tools help historians construct a coherent narrative of the past, critically examine sources, and provide a deeper understanding of historical events and contexts.

Class Room teaching and Dissertation Writing (Unit I, II and III: 20 Marks):

UNIT I: Conventional Tools of History

Primary Source Material: Oral history provides primary source material, including personal recollections and eyewitness accounts. These narratives can offer new information, clarify existing records, and provide personal insights into historical events.

Diverse Perspectives: It captures the voices of individuals who might be overlooked in traditional historical records, such as women, minorities, and other marginalized groups. This helps to create a more inclusive and comprehensive historical record.

Cultural Preservation: Oral history preserves cultural heritage, including languages, dialects, and vernacular speech. It ensures that the historical record includes the voices and experiences of diverse communities.

Methodology

Interview: Oral historians use structured interviews to gather detailed and reliable accounts. This involves preparing questions, creating a comfortable environment for the interviewee, and recording the conversation for accuracy.

Recording and Preservation: Interviews are recorded (audio or video) and often transcribed. These recordings are preserved in archives, libraries, and museums, making them accessible for future research.

UNIT II: Non-Conventional Tools of History

Non-conventional historical sources refer to materials and methods beyond traditional documents and artifacts to provide a broader and often more nuanced understanding of the past. These sources can include:

Oral Histories are interviews and testimonies from individuals who experienced historical events firsthand. This method captures personal perspectives and memories that might not be recorded in written documents.

Folklore and Legends: Stories, myths, and legends passed down through generations can offer insights into cultural values, beliefs, and historical events, even if they are inaccurate.

Material Culture: Everyday objects, tools, clothing, and household items that provide information about the daily lives, practices, and social structures of past societies.

Visual Arts: Paintings, sculptures, and other forms of visual art that reflect the cultural, political, and social contexts of their time.

Music and Oral Traditions: Songs, chants, and oral traditions convey historical narratives, cultural practices, and social values.

Environmental Evidence: Data from fields like paleoclimatology, geology, and biology help reconstruct past environments and understand how human societies interact with their surroundings.

Digital Archives and Social Media: Modern digital platforms and archives capture contemporary history and provide new ways to access and analyze historical data.

These non-conventional sources can enrich our understanding of history by providing diverse perspectives and highlighting aspects of the past that traditional sources might overlook.

Community Histories: Oral history projects often focus on documenting the experiences of specific communities, capturing their unique stories and contributions to broader historical narratives.

Social Movements: It is used to document participants' experiences in social and political movements, providing personal insights into the motivations, challenges, and impacts of these movements.

Family Histories: Oral history is also famous for preserving family histories, capturing the stories and memories of older generations for future descendants; families with a significant impact on the society

Challenges

Subjectivity: Oral history relies on personal memories, which can be subjective and influenced by the passage of time. Historians must critically evaluate these accounts and corroborate them with other sources.

Ethical Considerations: It is crucial to ensure the consent and comfort of interviewees. Historians must handle sensitive topics carefully and respect the privacy and wishes of those sharing their stories.

UNIT III: Oral History

Personal Narratives: Oral history gives individuals a voice, allowing them to share their personal stories and perspectives, which can enrich the historical record.

Diverse Perspectives: It helps to include diverse viewpoints, especially from marginalized or underrepresented groups.

Cultural Memory: Oral histories preserve cultural traditions and memories that might be lost.

Community Histories: Documenting the experiences of different communities.

Social Movements: Capturing participants' voices in social and political movements.

Family Histories: Preserving family stories and genealogies.

UNIT IV: Field Study (20)

It involves research outside traditional classroom settings, often at historical sites or within communities. This method allows historians to gather data through direct observation and interaction.

Experiential Learning: Students and researchers gain hands-on experience, which can deepen their understanding of historical contexts.

Historical events' geographical and cultural settings

Interdisciplinary Approach: Field studies often integrate methods from archaeology, anthropology, and geography, providing a comprehensive view of history.

Project/ Dissertation Guidelines:

- i) A topic may be chosen from the syllabus for the project
- ii) A topic selected for project should be precise and having specific objectives
- iii) Project should be written within 4000 words.
- iv) It may be submitted both in hand written and type format
- v) Submission of project will be intimated by the Head, Dept of History
- vi) Not more than 15% plagiarism will be entertained.
- vii) Students will be allocated in separate groups to individual faculty member

SEMESTER- IV

Optional Course:

HIS 405C: GLOBAL HISTORY OF PANDEMIC

Lecture 50

Unit I: Defining disease; differences between endemic, epidemic, and pandemic with examples from each; pattern evolution of a disease from endemic to epidemic then to a pandemic; change in the trend of the virus or bacteria through different waves; treatments; role of World Health Organization. An Introductory discussion on COVID Pandemic from the first to the third wave

Unit II: CHOLERA: The First Cholera Pandemic occurred in Kolkata, Dhaka, Burma, and Ceylon in 1817 and in Thailand, Indonesia, the Philippines, and Basra in 1821. For the next couple of years, the disease disappeared from most of those places except around the Bay of Bengal as it traveled along trade routes from Arabia to the eastern African and Mediterranean coasts.

Second Cholera Pandemic: Europe and America in 1829; Moscow in 1830, continuing to Finland and Poland; through traders and ports, reached Hamburg and Sutherland in 1831; 1832 in the Western Hemisphere, Canada to the USA; in 1833, it reached Mexico and Cuba.

Third Cholera Pandemic: India, Persia, Europe, United States, Great Britain in 1852

Fourth and Fifth Cholera Pandemic: Naples, Russia, China, and Japan between 1863 to 1881; South America in the 1890s

Sixth Cholera Pandemic: From 1899 to 1923, cholera was lethal in India, Arabia, and along the North African Coast; Mecca in 1902; Russia; certain ports of Western Europe; Italy, Greece, Turkey, and the Balkans; after 1923, cholera receded from most of the world, though endemic cases continued in the Indian subcontinent.

Seventh Cholera Pandemic: Cholera did not spread widely again until 1961 - seventh pandemic spread throughout Asia during the 1960s; during the next decade it spread westward to the Middle East and reached Africa, where cholera had not appeared for 70 years; Africa was badly affected in the 1990s; by 2005 cholera had been reported in nearly 120 countries; Zimbabwe cholera outbreak in 2008 – 09; Haiti Cholera outbreak of 2010 - 11

Unit III: 'SPANISH'FLU: Spanish Flu did not originate in Spain, there is an absolutely different reason behind this connotation.

First Wave early 1918: Outbreak in a military Camp Funston in Kansas, United States 1918, from there to several military camps of US; troop travel led and brought the flu over the Atlantic Ocean; reached France, Germany, Belgium, Luxembourg and Switzerland; continued to spread from there to Eastern Europe and North Africa; reached Japan, Taiwan, Korea; Great Britain; via the Port of Bombay to India; Australia.

Second Wave late 1918: naval base in Brest France where military personnel from different countries gathered, bringing the mutated strain of the flu with them; US military camps, first in Boston, then to other Camps; rest of North America, Central America, and South America, including Brazil and the Caribbean region; France; African Continent along the coast, rivers, and railways, along the river Zambezi into Ethiopia; Russia, due to the Russian Civil War and the Trans-Siberian railway it spread throughout Asia, including Iran, India, China, and Japan.

Third Wave late 1919: began in Australia, spread to Europe, mainly affecting Siberia, France; and Great Britain; isolated outbreaks in US cities; Mexico.

After the three main waves, a few minor outbreaks occurred. Mitigation measures were remarkably similar to those for Covid-19: face masks, social distancing, and isolation / confinement.

Unit IV: EBOLA: It began with the death of a two-year-old toddler in December 2013 in Meliandou, a small village in south eastern Guinea; West Africa 2013-2014; Escalation of the outbreak and the role of WHO; USA; Spain; Germany, Norway, France, Italy, Switzerland, and the UK

The Course ends by questioning the pattern of past three pandemics with the present COVID Pandemic, and lessons, if at all, learnt from history.
