Major A4/B4: Philosophy of Religion

Credits 04

Learning outcomes:

The successful completion of this philosophical paper offers students a profoundly enriching and transformative experience. The process fosters critical thinking by developing transferable skills such as philosophical reasoning, debate, and analytical writing - competencies that are invaluable in all academic and professional contexts. More than just building skills, writing the paper compels deep self-reflection, requiring students to examine the rational foundations of their own existential beliefs with greater clarity and depth. This introspective inquiry nurtures intellectual humility by revealing the inherent limits of human knowledge and certainty, inspiring a lifelong engagement with the profound existential and moral questions that define the human condition.

Learning outcomes:

After finishing this course, students will be able to analyze and distinguish between the three main aspects of language: Syntax (the rules for structure), Semantics (the study of meaning), and Pragmatics (how context affects language). Students will demonstrate a strong understanding of the philosophical problems associated with word meaning, the challenges of forming clear definitions, and the complexities resulting from vagueness in language. Furthermore, they will explain various theories of sentence meaning and critically evaluate the essential thesis at the heart of analytic philosophy, which links the meaning of a statement to its testability and verification. By achieving these outcomes, students will acquire the analytical tools required for rigorous philosophical inquiry into the nature and limits of linguistic expression.
